LEGISLATION AND POLICY DEVELOPMENTS

Burma Ratifies Child Soldier Treaty

On September 27, Burma signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict (CRC-OPAC). Also known as the Child Soldier Treaty, the Protocol ensures that children under the age of 18 are not recruited for armed conflict. This is an important step for human rights in the country, which has in recent years committed to stopping the use of child soldiers. However, the recent case of Aung Ko Htwe highlights the need to not only protect youth from becoming child soldiers, but to ensure that former child soldiers are supported and allowed to speak freely about their experiences. Aung Ko Htwe was released in September after serving two years in prison for an interview with Radio Free Asia, in which he spoke about his time as a child soldier. In order to create reconciliation and repair the harm caused by the use of child soldiers, freedom of expression must be protected.

Human Rights Law Added to Burmese University Curriculums

Human rights law courses have been added to degree requirements for international relations and law students at universities across Burma. The law education board decided to include the human rights law requirements at universities across the country following an agreement between the governments of Denmark and Burma, which saw the development of the curriculum for use in elective courses at Yangon Eastern District University and Dagon University in Burma. Third year law students and fourth year international relations students will be required to take the course, which has been endorsed by the Ministry of Education.
LAND RIGHTS

Local Farmers Township Protest Farmland Management Committee in Kawkareik Township

On the 11-th of October, local farmers walked around and protested in Kawkareik Township, Karen State because there were no open case of original land and the local farmers were being accused. The local farmers said that they protested because the township land management committee did not open the case of original land regarding to the farmland of the original owner and made a unanimous decision. Although 15 acres of land were issued land ownership title in Daw Phyar village, Kawkareik Township in 2013, the original land owners did not receive full acres of lands that had been confiscated and the township farmland management committee issued land ownership title to others and sued the original land owners.
