December 10 was International Human Rights Day. In Burma ethnic armed conflicts that erupted over 71 years ago have lead to a number of human rights violations as have the civil and political rights violations committed by the government. In December, the severity of Burmas human rights situation was made clear when Burma was called to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on charges of Genocide against the Rohingya. This underscores the need for the government to respect and protect the rights of all its citizens, and it shows that there is an urgent need to improve the human rights situation in Burma. In order to improve the human rights situation as soon as possible, the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) urges the government:

- End impunity of perpetrators and take legal action to bring accountability and responsibility for the human rights abuse
- Implementation reparation and rehabilitation programs for victims
- Ratify international human rights treaties
- Parliament reviews human rights law (Particularly the laws regarding discrimination, freedom of speech, write, and processions)
- Unconditional release of political prisoners and dismissal of charges against activists, students, farmers, workers, and civilians
- Promote the human rights situation by implementing peace processes as soon as possible for national reconciliation

Freedom of Speech and Expression

In December, activists and civilians who have exercised their right to freedom of expression, are continued to be oppressed. A total of seven people were sentenced in December, they were Nay Zar Tun, the sister of a former child soldier, Khin Cho, and Zaw Myint, four members of Peacock Generation, Zay Yar Lwin, Paing Ye Thu, Paing Phyo Min a.k.a. D Yay, and Su Yadana Myint.

Freedom of expression is a right protected in all democratic countries. Yet it Burma it is not protected by the government. As Burma does not respect and comply with Article 354 (a) of the 2008 Constitution, compliance with international norms regarding freedom of expression is far from near. Moreover the government still needs to ratify the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). Therefore, AAPP urges the government to promote the freedom of expression and freedom of speech, and also uphold basic human rights by respecting domestic and international legal standards.

Restrictions on Civil Rights

Please see AAPP website to download full stories for December
While the freedom of speech and expression faces threats, the civil rights of the citizens are also restricted. In December, Naing Tun Aung, Min Thein, Phoe Mar, Kyaw Zayya and hundred households administrator Moe Linn, residents of Aung Thabyay Village in Patheingyi Township in Mandalay Division, were arrested in connection with a protest of a cement factory near Aung Thabyay village and were charged and prosecuted under Section 436, 440 and 114 of the Penal Code. Moreover, hundred households administrator Moe Linn of Aung Thabyay Village had been sentenced under Section 505(b) of the Penal Code. The Sentencing of civilians delays national reconciliation and violates citizens human rights. Therefore, we urge the government to implement national reconciliation by immediate developing the basic rights of its every citizen.

Prison Reform and the Role of the Key Population

While the prison conditions in Burma are still deteriorating, the various prison issues have been occurring due to the consequences of the prison overcrowding. In addition, prisoners have been violated their rights, have been faced tortures and discriminations. Besides, a riot took place at Myinchan Prison in Mandalay Region in December. In order to end and stop these things happening, the prison reforms have to be implemented as soon as possible. The Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) reiteratively urges the government to reform the prisons and had already published reports of The Prison Conditions in Burma and The Potential for Prison Reform and Prison Overcrowding and the Need for Urgent Reform. Furthermore, we are working with the Myanmar National Human Rights Commission (MNHRC), the relevant Hluttaw committees and the organizations working for the prison issues and also holding the workshops.

While carrying out the prison reform, it is essential to protect the key population in detention centers, prisons and labor camps. As the key population is vulnerable, they have more suffer human rights abuses. Accordingly, a key population must be considered to reform the prison. From November 4 to November 5, the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) organized the workshop with the organizations working for Key populations and organizations leading the former political prisoners at AAPP office. Moreover, on December 7, AAPP held a consultative workshop on prison reform in Naypyidaw. A total of 52 people, including 25 members of committees of the lower house, eight members of Committees of the upper house, people from organizations led by political prisoners, and Key Population organizations attended the workshop. At the workshop, we discussed the Key Population. Furthermore, we will be releasing a report on this in March 2020 and sharing our findings with stakeholders and the relevant parliament committees.

Consequences of Conflict in Ethnic Areas

It has been approximately one year since the start of increased armed clashes between the military and the Arakan Army (AA). With the increase of human violations during armed conflicts, the indigenous people deteriorate faced the human abuses in accuse of the relation of both armed groups. The incidents occurred in December highlights shown below;

Arrests

In addition, six civilians injured by firing by both armed groups during clashes. Furthermore, seven civilians including three children from Mrauk-U and Myebon Townships in Arakan State and Paletwa Township in Chin State died due to the artillery shells exploded and 35 including six children from Mrauk-U, Minbya, Myebon and Paletwa Township injured.

In December, the Arakan Army (AA) arrested a total of 46 civilians. Ye Thein out of 46, who is the chairman of the NLD in Buthidaung Township, was killed by a shell explosion while being held in Arakan Army (AA) detention.

The peace process has to be implemented immediately to end and overcome the armed conflict in Burma and the independent investigation commission has to be formed to prevent and protect human rights violations. Ethnic Armed Groups cannot operate in impunity.

The Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) has listed, based on the information in relation to the Arakan Conflict from January to December of 2019, a total of seven political prisoners from Arakan State, who are serving their prison sentences in relation to the Arakan Conflict, there are a total of 121 local Arakanese are facing trial inside prison and nine are facing trial outside prison. The picture is shown below;
Child Soldiers Recruitment

Burma ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) in July 1991, and Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict was ratified in September 2019. However, the recruitment of child soldiers in Myanmar continues.

- A 17-year-old Aung Naing Win from Kha Pyat Village, Pyapon Township, Ayeyarwady Region disappeared in April 2019. He was recruited as a child soldier and was released by the military in December.
- Two boys from northern Shan State are currently being forced to serve as child soldiers for the Military, and their parents held a press conference in Rangoon on December 20, calling for their sons to be returned home. One of the children is a 17-year-old Abraham from Lwe Yin Mingalar Village in Pekon Township. Another child soldier is a 16-year-old with autism named Lui Say from Aung Club village, Hsi Hseng Township.

Having been recruited as a child soldier in their early years, children will not only lose their right to a childhood but also suffer physical and emotional trauma. Therefore, Burma has to respect and protect the provisions of these treaties as the country has ratified two international child protection agreements. Hence, we encourage the government to scrutinize the recruitment of child soldiers in Burma and act accordingly.

Land Issues

In December, the issues of land confiscation and land disputes have continued unabated. Below are some of the events that have taken place in relation to land issues in December.

- Farmers protested calling for compensation at Botataung Township court in Rangoon, after authorities decided to close the case without compensation for the confiscated land.
• Approximately 50 residents of Durah village in Hinthada Township, Ayeyarwady Division protested demanding the return of confiscated lands and the unused lands in Hinthada Township.

• Nearly 200 residents of Kankone Village, Yinmabin Township, Sagaing Region protested and demanded compensation for 2,000 acres of confiscated land by the copper company and for access to the water supply of the Chindwin River.

In May 2016, the Central Committee for the Review of Land Confiscation was set up. Although 3,480 complaints have been sent to the Central Committee, only five were answered according to the annual report of the lower house of the farmers and labor committee. Therefore, the land issue is in a very vulnerable position and needs to be addressed as soon as possible. Land confiscation that continues for many years and ongoing land disputes have caused significant damage to indigenous people and farmers. For that reason, we encourage the Government to promote the interests of indigenous peoples and farmers by addressing the issue of land as soon as possible.
